CUTTER BRINGS INJURED MAN ON TRAWLER HOME

Stephen Smallcomb of East Boston, a member of the crew of the Boston beam trawler Breaker, was brought to port at Boston, yesterday, by the Coast Guard cutter Tampa, to which he was transferred on Tuesday night at a point 58 miles southeast by south from Highland Light, Cape Cod, after he had severed an artery in his hand. The man bled profusely after receiving the cut, and the skipper of the Breaker, fearing he would bleed to death, requested the aid of the coast guard.

Proceeding to the fishermen's location, the cutter wirelessly instructions for application of a tourniquet. Making contact some time later, the Tampa took off the injured man, who was treated in her sick bay. By the time she reached the navy yard yesterday, the patient had recovered to such an extent, that he did not need to go to a hospital, and went directly home.
